New York Assembly Acts Upon Committee Report.

SPECIFIC CHARGES ARE MADE

Speculation in Wall Street at a Time When He Was Advocating Legislation Which Would Affect Stock Prices and Holding Out of His Sworn Statement Campaign Subscriptions the Chief Offenses Alleged.

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 12 .- Here is the resolution for the impeachment of Governor Sulzer offered in the assembly by Aaron J. Levy of New York, majority leader, based upon the report of the Frawley legislative committee, which has been investigating charges made against the governor:

"Whereas, the joint legislative investigating committee has filed a report in the assembly on the 11th day of August, 1913, together with the testimony annexed thereto showing or tending to show that William Sulzer, governor of the state of New York, made a false and fraudulent report to the secretary of state, under oath as required by law.

"That the total contributions in aid "That the total contributions in aid of his campaign as a candidate for the VACANCY IN SENATE office of governor were $5,460 and no more, and whereas in truth and in fact the amount was greatly in excess o said sum to the personal knowledge of said Sulzer, and such report further showing or tending to show,

"That he converted to his own private use contributions given in aid of his said election for the purchase of securities or other private uses;

"That he engaged in stock market speculations at a time when he was governor and vigorously pressing legislation against the New York stock exchange, which would affect the business of and prices on the exchange;

"That he used the power of his office as governor to suppress and withhold the truth to prevent the production of evidence in relation to the investigation of campaign contributions legislative investigating committee,

"That as governor the said William Sulzer has punished legislators who disagreed or differed with him in legislation enacted in the public interest and public welfare and has traded executive approval of bills for support of his direct primary and other measures in which he was personally interested;

"That as governor he willfully and corruptly made false public statements advising and directing citizens to suppress evidence in reference to his unlawful use of contributions made to him for campaign purposes, and whereas he has otherwise corruptly and unlawfully acted or omitted to act,

"Therefore, be it resolved, that William Sulzer, governor of the state of New York, be and hereby is impeached for willful and corrupt conduct in office and for high crimes and misdemeanors."

The asssembly adopted the Frawley committee's report, virtually demanding the impeachment of Governor Surzer, by a vote of 65 to 35. The leaders of the anti-Sulzer Democrats say they have the necessary 76 votes, a majority of the asssembly, to carry the resolution. The program is to adopt the Levy resolution this afternoon. A committee of nine, with Mr. Levy as chairman, will then be appointed to draw up articles of impeachment to be presented to the senate on Thursday From the moment impeachment is voted in the asssembly Governor Sulzer will cease to perform the duties of his office. WILSON ANGRY AT WAR LOBBY

Effort Being Made, He Believes, to Cause Row.

GRILLS TROUBLE BREEDERS

On High Authority It Is Declared the President Is Thoroughly Angry at What He Believes to Be a Concerted Effort Being Made in This Country to Precipitate War Between the United States and Mexico.

Washington, Aug. 12 .-- By high authority the statement has been authorized that President Wilson believes an organized campaign of misrepresentation is being waged to plunge this country into a war with Mexico. The president, however, does not attach great importance to these alleged efforts to thwart his plans for a peaceful settlement of the controversy now wearing the heart out of the southern republic. Aside from this development and the dispatching of another cruiser to Mexican waters, the Washington government is marking time on the Mexican situation.

Special Representative Lind has made no report as to what had occurred since his arrival at Mexico City, and it was learned that the president expects no detailed statement from him immediately. The Nashville is the latest cruiser ordered to Mexican waters. She is to assist in the work of removing American refugees. Like the cruiser Tacoma, which was ordered to Mexico Sunday, the Nashville is to be used at ports where harbor facilities are not sufficient to permit of the entrance of the battleships now in Mexican waters.

Emphatic statements were made in official circles of the president's determination to wait upon any definite course of action for this government. The president intends, however, that eventually suggestions shall be made by the United States to Provisional President Huerta looking toward the establishment of peace in Mexico.

These communications will be transmitted through the American charge, of the committee on rules. Nelson O'Shaughnessy. The time for will be required for Mr. Lind to com- soon as the caucus registers its ap- ey already advanced on the $38,000 quickly subsided. plete his investigation.

at the turn developments have taken in the last few days, and makes no secret of his optimism at the general outlook. Apparently he considers that their hopes in this regard are realized dangerous potentialities have been removed by his success in placating the, for debate in the house early next members of the senate committee on foreign affairs and thus making sure that for a time at least no ill-considered speeches on Mexico will be delivered in the senate. The failure of the predicted outbreaks in Vera Cruz and Mexico City against Special Envoy Lind to materialize and the assurances from the Mexican authorities that they will give Mr. Lind full protection as an American citizen convinced the president that the way is now open for a fair trial of the policy he has evolved for dealing with the Mexican problem.

The declaration of the president's belief that an organized effort is being made to plunge this nation into war aroused intense interest here. Recent investigations by many scientists indicate that the original Indian population of the United States was tion of southeastern Asia and Mongo to September 30th, Dr. Ales Hrdlicka of the Smithsonian institution, who lately returned from that region and is now in Washington, says he found striking evidences that the theory is correct. He bases his belief not only on the prehistoric remains found in this little ex. W. P. TOWNSEND, D. P. Dr. Hrdiicka explored southern Siberia, both east and west of Lake Baikal. He extended his search into outer Mongolia. The capital, Urga, and two large monasteries of the region are constantly visited by natives from all the surrounding country. On one occasion he had a chance to see a gathering of 7,000 natives in one place.

The museums of Siberia proved unexpectedly rich in ethnological and

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Misplaced Dream

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

AUL LANE stood on the heights above Delhi, looking down upon a city of

The ancient capital of the Moguls stretched away beneath him, mile after mile of mean and squalid buildings, relieved here and there by the splendid orb of temple or marble minaret. But it was not at the native city Paul looked; rather at the mushroom town which had sprung up almost overnight, with its acres of canvas and high scaffolding. King George and Queen Mary were to be crowned in their magnificent pavilion on the third morning, when all the feudatory chiefs of the sub-continent would present themselves before them to pledge their loyalty.

It was the first time that a reigning British sovereign had set foot within the boundaries of his Indian empire. And the cause of this long journey was known to every one. India was seething with disaffection, so that it required the presence of the king-emperor to strike home into the imagination of the natives something of the power of the British sway.

Paul's mission had been suddenly determined on. The League of Lost Causes, as it was popularly termed, sitting at its headquarters, had resolved that England's prestige must be shattered in the East, that, out of her difficulties, something might be gained. The league spun webs within webs; no stroke was planned but had some bearing upon its ultimate ends: the restoration of the monarchical ideal among the peoples and the overthrow of democracy. And England, as the leader of the democratic nations of Europe, was hated perhaps most bitterly by those who directed Jean Rosny, its secretary, had called on Paul in Paris and outlined the situation.

"Desperate as the chance appears," he said, "it requires only determination and self-confidence to effect our purpose. The British power is tottering; India will never willingly see a king from overseas crowned in the sacred capital of the Moguls. We have secured the adhesion of the most powerful of the feudatory princes-the Jam of Nagshipur. He commands thirty millions of subjects-as many as the population of all Italy. The native troops look to him as their leader and will follow him. When he stands before King George and Queen Mary, then, instead of pledging his loyalty, he will address their native bodyguard, order them into arrest, and himself pluck the crown from the British sovereign's head and place it on his own. Delhi will acclaim him emperor, and all India will be ablaze with rebellion.

"Now, my dear Paul," Rosny had continued, "unfortunately the Jam, who alone can commit this action with the certainty of success, is vacillating. Educated at Oxford, he has something of an Englishman's loyalty to his emperor, or rather, let us say, he realizes the might of England's power. But the thought of dominion has dazzled him. He can be persuaded. You will go, then, to his palace at Delhi and communicate with him through his chief officer, Ramchundra Sing, our Indian representative. Together you will overcome the Jam's reluctance. And to prevent all possibility of failure I may tell you that, out of the millions which you have placed at the disposal of the league, we have devoted nearly $500,-000 to this purpose.

"And now, Paul, I may speak upon a subject more to your heart than even this magnificent opportunity to overthrow the power of England in the East. I will speak as man to man and not as the league's western secretary. I am not blind to the perception of your ultimate desires; you love Mademoiselle, as we have agreed to term her-the mysterious, unknown woman who visited you in America and pledged you and your millions to our cause. You feel that we are playing with you-no, don't protestutilizing your services and your millions without the intention to admit you into our councils. Rest assured that Mademoiselle has followed each effort of yours with interest and appreciation, and that, if you succeed in this endeavor, you shall at least learn her identity. That much I guarantee, and the rest shall come after."

This much Paul recalled as he looked down upon the Durbar city, with tents and pavilions and flying flags, roped-off courses for camels and elephants, and its circles of seats for the spectators. The Jam, clad in the robes of empire, was at last resolved to make his coup at the psychological moment. So much he had learned at an interview with Ramchundra Sing, a Sikh of high lineage, who, speaking in flawless English, dilated upon the possibilities of the upon this throw." Paul had an appointment at the Jam's palace for that afternoon. Much remained to be done. The disbursement of the immense sum of money which had been devoted to the enterprise lay in the hands of Ramchundra, but it was Lane's duty to supervise all the details of the scheme. He was especially perplexed because it was impossible to witness a rehearsal of the Durbar, especially of the coronation ceremony. With one so vacillating as the Jam was known to be, there was always the fear that the psychological moment would be allowed to pass, that the Indian prince, overawed by the magnificence of the scene, would fail to strike, and that the latent hostility of the crowd toward England would be converted into a genuine enthusiasm for their for-

His visit to the Jam did not prove productive of much confidence. The prince was a fat man, approaching middle life, and evidently more adapted to the enjoyment of his placid and protected sovereignty than to heroic measures. For a long time only generalities were discussed; each time that Paul approached the subject of his visit the Jam cast a terrified glance toward Ramchundra as though to beseech him to change the topic of conversation. At last Paul left in despair; he came to the conclusion that the prince did not mean to keep his part in the bargain and could not be

On the next morning, however, Paul received a visit from Ramchundra which materially altered the situation.

"I had a talk last night with his highness," began the secretary in mellifluous English. "He wants to consult his astrologer before finally committing himself. You are to meet us there." He gave Paul an address in a little blind alley leading out of the Grand Bazar. "As the astrologer has been amply bribed," he continued, smiling, "I do not doubt that he will consider the omens favorable.

"Now, Mr. Lane," he went on, "it is understood that at the moment when his highness approaches the dais to make his obeisance you, who will be watching from the top tier of seats immediately in front of the pavilion, will drop your handkerchief. The signal will be seen by the commander of the Sikhs and will indicate that all is in readiness. As his highness arrests the king and queen the commander will swiftly move his troops to encircle them, cutting off all access on the part of the natives. A revolt will break out, bis highness will rule in Delhi, and English rule is shattered forever throughout India."

He stopped and looked craftily at

"You are thinking, 'Suppose the prince changes his mind again at the last moment," he said.

"Well-yes," admitted Paul. "Mr. Lane," said the secretary, in an apparent spontaneous outburst of confidence, "you have never fully trusted me in this affair. Now don't explain your position; a secretary to a prince somehow gets into the habit of reading his fellowmen fairly accurately. Well, sir, let me tell you that I, too, have a good deal at stake, for I would assuredly rather be the prime minister of an Indian empire than a mere secretary to a principality. So I have taken a certain step to clinch the matter. I have seen the astrologer in private and have arranged that the prince's coffee shall be drugged when we three meet there tomorrow night, twelve hours before the Durbar be-

"Drugged!" exclaimed Paul Lane. "But how can a drugged man play so important a part?"

"You have heard of hashish?" asked Ramchundra Sing.

"It is a very mysterious drug, especially when blended with certain other narcotics, the knowledge of which is confined to some of the Indian practitioners. For half an hour after swallowing it one feels no effects at all; after that, when given in certain quantities and combinations, it possesses the peculiar property of destroying the perception of time. For instance, to the man under hashish, a thousand years may pass, or seem to pass, in a moment, and conversely also. This is by the way. The most important effect of the drugs which the astrologer is to administer is that one under their effects is able to go about his business apparently in full possession of his senses. Actually, he is an automaton. He is like one hypnotized; he obeys all orders unquestioningly. For the inhibition of the processes of ratiocination leaves the mind in a has been placed in it. You understand me? Good! Well, then, his highness

He followed the Hindoo into an apartment on the ground floor and stumbled into almost complete obscurity, except for the glow of a small brazier in one corner, in which incense was burning. Somebody came forward and grasped his hand. It was Ramchundra, and he led Paul to a large, ornate chair, beneath the small aperture high in the wall which served for a window. > A deep, indrawn exclamation answered the question. As every head craned forward and every heart beat hard Paul, instinctively following the gaze of the crowd, perceived the Jam of Nagshipur advance slowly in his turn toward the royal dais. Though chief of all the princes, he had been held almost to the last before being permitted to pledge his allegiance; it was a subtle slight devised by the minds of the rulers of the country in return for the Jam's supposed anti-English proclivities. The people, perfectly aware of the meaning of this maneuver, watched him with bated breath. Upon his action depended the fate of the empire. Would he pledge himself or would he fling defiance into the faces of his English rulers?

The Jam advanced uneasily, evidently almost overcome by nervousness, and glancing as he advanced toward the Sikh officer, who, with his back turned to him as he sat his horse, could see nothing, but kept his gaze fixed steadfastly upon the top tier of the amphitheater.

Suddenly a sigh ran through the assembled multitudes. They quivered, as wheat quivers in a summer breeze. For with a gesture which might have been either of despair or self-immolation, the Jam had thrown himself into the dust before the dais and kissed the monarch's robe.

Suddenly, out of the crowd, a face burned itself into Paul's heart like a live ember-a beautiful, imperious face, a woman's face, set sternly in unutterable contempt as the eyes met

It was the face of the beautiful unknown, whom he had so dramatically met in America and who had sent him upon his quest. She stared up at him from among the distinguished guests assembled under the royal canopy; and as he met those eyes Paul flung up his arms and cried.

And the moving picture quivered and vanished out of the crystal.

Paul opened his eyes.

It was evening and the sun hung, a ball of fire, low down in the west. The tamarisks quivered in the evening breeze. Somewhere a nightingale was singing. The astrologer, the secretary, the sleeping prince were gone.

He was lying under a bench on the top tier of the deserted amphitheater. Opposite him was a bare stretch of ground, where formerly the royal tent had been. And everywhere tents were being packed, wagons loaded, troops deploying over the ground. The city of tents was gone.

Paul stumbled down the almost endless stairs toward the city street. His head ached and his limbs would hardly respond to the promptings of his will. When at last he reached the level of the street he noticed that his clothes were damp, as though after a rain, and that he was dishevelled as a

Evidently there was more than in-that if it was lifted the Constitutionalist forces could bring Huerta to terms within ninety days, and the military experts at Washington are prone to agree with him.

Mr. Lind's Status.

Officially Mr. Lind, who was once governor of Minnesota and a representative in congress and later senator from that state, is described as "adviser to the embassy in the present situation." In fact he is a mediator in embryo. It is for him to impress upon the warring Mexican factions the necessity of peace and the urgent need

Up to this time the sador to the southern republic Huerta government has received no est of permanent peace in Mexico. As may lead to a situation even more ate committee on foreign relations in Washington, Mr. Lind has no more standing in Mexico than any other American citizen except that conferred upon him by the president. This mingling of the official and unofficial necessarily imposes new responsibilities on all concerned which are not cover ed fully by law or treaty obligations.

The policy of the administration in sending ex-Governor Lind to the Mex ican capital in this quasiofficial fash ion, is a new one, so far as this country is concerned. The nearest approach to it was the mission of James Blount of Georgia, who was sent to Hawaii in 1892 by President Cleveland as "paramount" commissioner. The re sult of his trip was the restoration of the monarchy in those islands. President Wilson and Secretary Bryan are of state in Washington to have worked out the policy over the protests of ad visers in the state department who are well versed in international law. That the policy is an experiment still seems to be the opinion of Washington.

Lind's Instructions.

Officials close to the administration have asserted since Mr. Lind's depart ure that Mr. Lind carried to Mexico a complete plan of action, including in structions to bring the friendly ad vances of President Wilson to the at tention of President Huerta, if possi ble. In addition. Mr. Lind is said to be qualified by instructions to consult generally in Mexico with a view to esgovernment at the same time, and these instructions have been interpret ed to mean that he may consult the Constitutionalist leaders if need be. It is believed by Washington officials that the administration has acted with due regard to recent advices received from Mexico City as to the progress of inter nal efforts in Mexico to bring about a peaceful solution of the difficulties

Members of congress who recall Mr Lind's distinguished services in the house a few years ago look upon his selection for the delicate Mexican mission with favor They believe Mr. Lind will make good if any one can At the same time, they point out that, as a member of congress. Mr. Lind was extremely independent at times, even breaking with his party when its deci tive methods, but all unite in praising the honesty and integrity and complete good faith with which he entered upon and conducted the legislative contest in which he played a prominent part.

First Task Difficult.

Huerta's attitude, as described in the newspapers, is likely to prove very different from that which he will assume with the personal representative of the president of the United States, who will tell him in effect that the United States wants him to get out.

Many Problems Ahead.

If Mr. Lind's mission is a success and he gets all sides to agree to a peaceful election the problem which will then confront Mexico will still be difficult. It may be necessary even, say the experts, to revise the electoral laws of Mexico and to provide new machinery for elections. The existing tion has insisted that it should be trol of the machinery.
